

A WORKING WOLF.

It Does the Churning for a Farmer's Family.

The Strange Manner in Which the Animal Was Reared and Taught to Perform His Labors on the Farm.

Any one who may visit Richard Cunningham's farm, which lies pretty well up in the Blue mountains in the north-eastern part of this county, says a Pittsburgh paper, will see a sight the like of which was probably never seen anywhere in this country before.

It is an immense black wolf—one of the last of its race in this State—with eyes that glare fiercely at all who come near him, with the exception of Farmer Cunningham himself, and accompanying his glare with savage growls, and yet meekly treading the monotonous round of a churning machine, like some household dog or old ewe sheep. This performance of a menial service by the wolf, singular as it is, is by no means the strangest thing about him. He has a history.

Last spring, a year ago, Farmer Cunningham discovered that something was carrying off his lambs almost as fast as they were born in his flock. He suspected that this was being done by a wildcat, and he set a trap to see if he could not catch the animal. When he went to his trap next morning he was amazed to find that, instead of a wildcat, he had captured a wolf.

It had been years since any one had seen or heard of wolves in that region, although they were at one time numerous in the Blue mountains. It was evident to Cunningham, however, that if the wolf he had caught in the trap belonged in that neighborhood it had not roamed the woods a solitary representative of its race. It was a she wolf, and, although the animal was held fast by both forefeet in the trap, she was lying patiently on the ground and giving suckle to a baby wolf when Cunningham appeared on the scene.

When the wolf saw him she sprang to her feet and savagely confronted him. He shot her through the head and captured the whelp alive. It was not more than three weeks old. Cunningham took it home with the carcass of the old one. The young wolf moaned piteously for its mother, and the farmer proposed killing it.

His wife would not hear of the killing of the whining cub, and took charge of it herself. She could not induce it to take substance, and it was in a good way to starve to death when Mrs. Cunningham had a bright idea. The night before her husband set the trap one of their ewes was robbed of her lamb. The wolf undoubtedly stole it. Failing in all her efforts to introduce food into the stomach of the baby wolf, Mrs. Cunningham carried it to the bereaved ewe.

The ewe was brought from the pasture to the farm-yard, and for weeks visitors saw the strange spectacle of a sheep suckling a wolf, the wolf, beyond all doubt, being the offspring of the one that robbed the sheep of her own young.

The wolf thrived amazingly on sheep's milk, and the strange foster-parent and child formed the strongest kind of an attachment to each other, which remained unbroken until the death of the sheep a few weeks ago.

As the wolf grew the unsociability of the entire savageness of his kind manifested itself, and he was kept securely chained. Although it was Mrs. Cunningham who saved his life, the wolf did not like her to come near him, but he early showed the greatest friendship to Farmer Cunningham, who handled him as easily as he would a house dog.

The old ewe sheep was the churn sheep of the farm, and it was no uncommon sight to see her and the wolf asleep side by side, but there was good reason to believe that no other sheep on the farm could have approached within reach of him with safety. A short time ago a barn door fell on the ewe, killed her. It was churning day, and Cunningham was at a loss to know what to do for power to run the treadmill that operated the churn.

Finally he thought of the wolf, which was unusually large and powerful one. He resolved to try the animal as a churner and put him on the mill. The wolf objected strongly at first, but when the machine started he submitted and ran off the churning in excellent style. Since then he has been regularly engaged in running the machine, and goes to his work as cheerfully as an animal of his kind could be expected to.

Complaint of Mormons.

Leading Mormons from Salt Lake City are always to be found in New York City, and they often tell of the hardships of Mormonism under the new policy of the Government, by which they have lost control in Utah. "Why," said one of them to a New York Sun reporter, "we are subjected to as much pressure as the Jews in Russia. Yet no public meeting is held in our defense. A great deal of our land has been taken from us, our church property has been put under taxation that it can not bear; our social institutions are forcibly changed; the Gentiles infringe upon our rights, and admission into the Union as a State is refused to us. The consequences will soon be seen. The old State of Deseret, a great part of it, will be deserted by the people who for forty years have been filling its fields and rearing its cities. In a few months we shall begin to move out of the United States as the Jews are moving out of Russia, and our people will find new homes in Mexico, where we have secured a broad slice of territory, and where we will not be interfered with. After that time you will never again be troubled over the Mormons."

Itinerant Dress Cleaners.

A new female device for earning a livelihood is that of going around to the houses of society people and cleaning and repairing fine dresses that have been accidentally soiled or otherwise injured. The scheme was developed in Buffalo. There are some women who have all they can attend to in this line.
